Dark Age Naval Power - a reassessment of Frankish and Anglo-Saxon Seafaring Activity, by John Haywood. 1999, 187 pages This is a work about Frankish and Anglo-Saxon seafaring, published by Anglo-Saxon Books, yet the Anglo-Saxons don't feature as prominently in it as you may have hoped. The first 77 pages are about early Germanic seafaring, which does provide a background, but I'd not really class the Roman period as being dark age.

Haywood (Dark Age Naval Power, 1999) says the Chauci were originally neither highly centralised nor highly stratified, though they became more so after 100 AD. Yorke ( The Conversion of Britain c.600-800 , 2006), speaking of the 5th century, describes the 'Continental Saxons' (which then included the Chauci) as having powerful local families and a dominant military leader.

Description. What little is known of the Frisii is provided by a few Roman accounts, most of them military. Pliny the Elder (AD 23-79) said their lands were forest-covered with tall trees growing up to the edge of the lakes. They lived by agriculture and raising cattle. In the late 1st century the Romans referred to the 'Greater Frisii' as living to the east of the lake Flevo, and the ...

Carvel built or carvel planking is a method of boat building where hull planks are laid edge to edge and fastened to a robust frame, thereby forming a smooth surface. Traditionally the planks are neither attached to, nor slotted into, each other, having only a caulking sealant between the planks to keep water out. Modern carvel builders may attach the planks to each other with glues and fixings.
