By the end of 1978, Land Rover built about 2,650 Forward Controls, and there's no better proof of their robustness than the simple fact that the original production continued in service for the next two decades. There's an irony to driving an old military vehicle around in a modern city, even on its outskirts.

In order to maximize the utility of the Land Rover Series Ila a cab-forward model was created which was called the Forward Control. The idea was to make the LWB Land Rover into a four wheel drive small truck with a 30 cwt (1.5 metric tonnes) capacity, by moving the driver's cab to the front of the vehicle thus greatly increasing the load area
